

PHI 322: The Examined Life

If, as Socrates reportedly proclaimed, “the unexamined life is not worth living”, then how ought we to live examined lives? This course invites students to consider the qualities and activities of a genuinely examined life. Students will read autobiographical examples of the examined life, develop practices of self-reflection, engage in a community project, and craft a portfolio that articulates their own understanding of the examined life.

Credits: Credits 3

Semester Offered:

Semester Offered

Offered at departmental discretion.