

HIS 230: Confronting the Many Faces of Genocide

An examination of the nature of genocide that confronts its many faces throughout history to present day by analyzing the social, political, economic, intellectual, ethical, and historical dimensions and developments essential to understanding various cases of genocide which have been perpetrated in our past and which are perhaps taking place today on our planet.

Credits: Credits 3

Semester Offered:

Semester Offered

Offered at departmental discretion.